

VACATIONING ASHORE AND AFLOAT

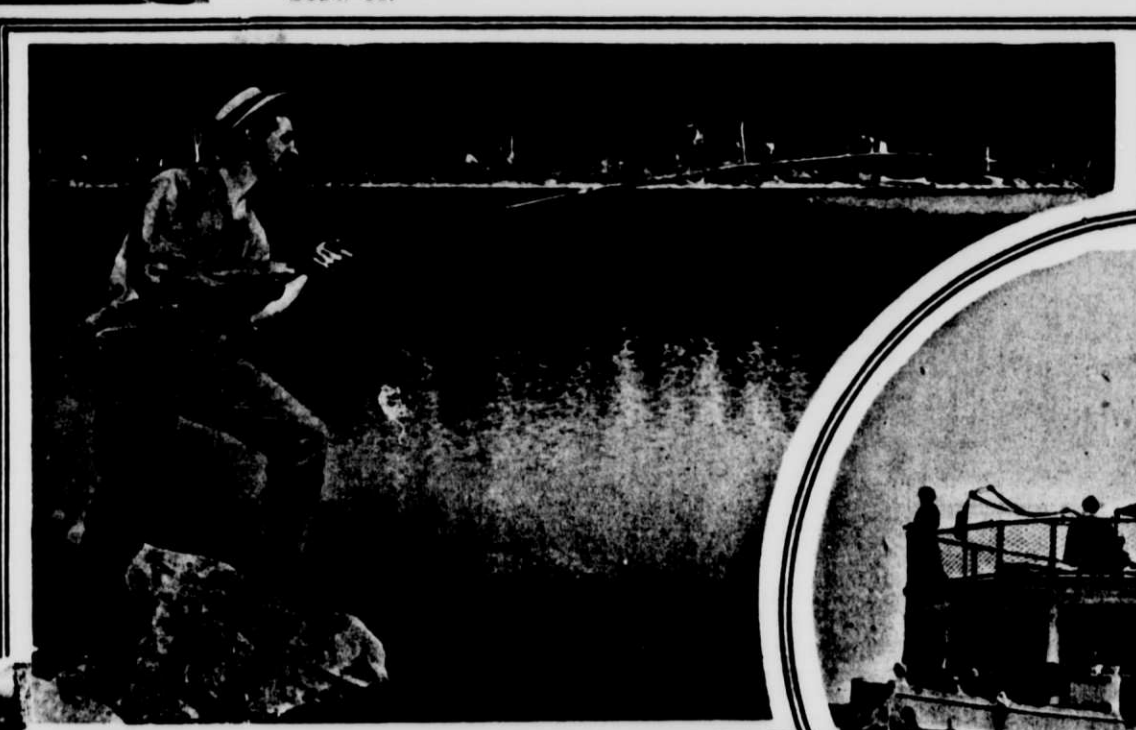

Summer is the actor's playtime, but Harry Woodruff never neglects an opportunity at his summer home at Siasconsett, Mass., to study types.

Thousands of healthy young Americans are taking their vacations this year aboard Uncle Sam's battleships. Above are some of the 470 officers and men of the New York Naval Militia on their cruise just ending on the Kentucky. Next Tuesday the Kentucky and the Maine will carry to sea New York's quota of the 2,000 who will take the naval training cruise to last until Sept. 12.

Helen Ware at her summer home in Winsted, Conn., spends much of her time in the water.

Joseph Kilgour (at the left) and Guy Bates Post are both enthusiastic fishermen. Kilgour at Siasconsett goes in for deep sea fishing, while Post sticks to the still waters at Winsted, Conn.

A number of working girls are having the finest vacation in the world through the kindness of Mrs. Robert Black, who has placed her palatial houseboat, the Annex, moored in Manhasset Bay, at the disposal of the Y. W. C. A. for this purpose. The girls have an "official sailor," who teaches them swimming and rowing. The houseboat is shown in the circle above, and in the circle at the left is a group of the girls on deck. Photos by Paul Thompson.
